SAAF men refused visas to honour fallen comrades

DEON LAMPRECHT

COLONEL JACK VAN EYSSSEN's Liberator bomber was one of 11 South African Airforce aircraft shot down over Warsaw by German anti-aircraft gunners in 1944.

Unlike 40 other SAAF airmen who failed to return from those nightly mercy missions, he managed to bale out and reach the safety of the Russian lines.

But politics now prevents him from returning to Warsaw to pay tribute to his fallen comrades of 31 Squadron.

The Primate of Poland, Cardinal Glemp, will today unveil a plaque in the Church of St Anne, Warsaw, to commemorate the Allied airmen who died while dropping supplies to the besieged city.

Colonel van Eyssen and the Officer Commanding 31 Squadron, Commandant Polla Kruger, were to represent the SAAF at the Warsaw ceremony, but when they got to Bonn this week they were refused visas by the Polish Government.

So they are returning to South Africa.

A SAAF statement in Pretoria said: "By not granting visas to the South Africans the Polish Government has denied them the opportunity to honour those 40 SAAF members who offered their lives for the Polish patriots and who now lie in the cemetery in Krakau in Poland."

The wreaths destined for Warsaw will now be laid at the SAAF memorial at Bays Hill, Pretoria, today. A similar ceremony will be held by the Polish Combatants Association and the Polish community at the Katyn Memorial, Johannesburg.

The 31 Squadron now operate Alouette and Puma helicopters, based at Hoedspruit.
